Opera House. Farther down the street the big red building was the site of Wojta's Store. Mr. Wojta replaced the original building with the present structure, which among other things housed a John Deere implement business. Go up Rockway Street to Elizabeth Street. The big house on the Northeast corner was Dr. Karnopp's house and the building on the Southwest corner was the original fire station. Across the street the Old School is located. Going further North on Rockway to Randolph Street is the Mishicot Museum, and across the street is St. Peter's Lutheran Church. Return to the Wojta store building and turn left on Main toward the park. Proceeding farther, the big white structure was the Central House Hotel which housed the Mishicot Telephone Company. The next building at one time housed Spevachek's Jewelry Store in the west corner of the building. The balance of the building housed Teren's Hardware Store, which also included a museum upstairs and a collection of rare and exotic animals behind the building. The corner building was the Badger Hotel; it is now the Cozy Corner Cafe and Badger Bowl. Across the street where the clinic building is situated was the stately home of A. Holst. Proceeding north to Elizabeth Street, on either corner of the intersection there are two well kept Victorian homes. The one on the southeast corner was the home of the owner of Scheuer's Meat Market. The home diagonally across the street, on the northwest corner of the intersection, was the home and office of Dr. Rick. The church is The Zion United Methodist church which is of interest. Return to Main Street and your walk is completed. Mishicot is surrounded by several century old farms. On Jambo Creek Road west of Mishicot across from the Sportsman Club is a monument marking the site of the Indian trading post.

② Mishicot Community High School
③ O.H. Schultz Elementary School
④ Holy Cross Catholic School

You can pick any starting point you wish; the directions just take a circular route. There are signs by each of the points of interest which give a brief history.

From the fire station across from the park, proceed up the hill to the house just before the telephone company. This home was the residence of Attorney Cloupek. From there, keep going south to Holy Cross Church, then to Holy Cross Cemetery. After visiting there, go back past the fire station, across the bridge, around the curve, to what is now the Laundromat, which was formerly James Pivonka's blacksmith shop. Then go to the second building from the Laundromat, which is now a barbershop and was a shoe store and Kadow's Meat Market. Continue to the bank building which was built in 1919 and is now the Village Hall. In the parking area just before reaching the bank, the Holst Bros. had a general store which sold everything from food to dry goods to fine clothing. Next to the bank building is River Edge Galleries which was originally Scheuer's Meat Market and ice house. Continue to the area just past the Tanning Salon and sign Co. building. In the area behind that building was the Mishicot Electric Co. Go to the corner of Rockway and Main Streets, turn left and go across the covered bridge to the large group of buildings on the right. The Mishicot Brewery operated for many years until prohibition forced it out of business. Go back across the bridge and you will see Skwor's Meat Market which is one of the oldest buildings in the Village. Next to that is a building which was a wagon and buggy manufacturing establishment and later housed a funeral home and furniture store. Next to that is a building which housed Joe Dufek's blacksmith shop. The next building of interest is the co-op Mill, which was built about l855 and operated as a water power saw mill which could produce 500 to 1,000 board feet of lumber a day. Across the street at the top of Cemetery Hill is the gravestone of Daniel Smith, one of the founders of the Village. Getting back to the park,you will pass the Mishicot
